

Is this the price to pay for our 'addiction to oil'?

Let's work together through Rotary Clubs to break that addiction

UCAR Model of oil slick movement after 130 days from original explosion

June 3, 2010 - the UCAR (University Corporation for Atmospheric Research) released a detailed computer modelling study that indicates oil from the massive spill in the Gulf of Mexico might soon extend along thousands of miles of the Atlantic coast and open ocean as early as this summer.

NCAR scientist Synte Peacock (who worked on the study) - "Actually, our best knowledge says the scope of this environmental disaster is likely to reach far beyond Florida, with impacts that have yet to be understood."
